

Celebrity News: Latest Celeb News & Celebrity Gossip - Us Weekly

Comfy-Chic

21 Best Comfy Lounge Pieces You Can Actually Wear Out

Take your loungewear looks out on the town with these different pieces you can style and wear practically anywhere — details

OMG

90 Day's Stephanie Matto Selling Farts in Ornaments After Hospitalization

Back at it! Stephanie Matto is continuing her popular fart selling business following her recent health scare. “Shipping out just in time for Christmas, thousand dollar fart filled ornaments for your □ by Tania [Maduro] and Stephanie,” the 90 Day Fiancé alum, 32, captioned an Instagram video earlier this month. In the clip, she and fellow 90 Day alum Maduro, 31, [...]

Legal Trouble

'RHOSLC' Star Jen Shah's Legal Drama: Everything We Know

Jen Shah was indicted for her alleged role in a long-running telemarketing scheme while filming season 2 of The Real Housewives of Salt Lake City — and all eyes are on the Bravo star as she faces up to 14 years in prison. Bravo viewers met Shah during season 1 of RHOSLC, which filmed in [...]

News

Government Requests RHOSLC's Jen Shah Be Sentenced to 10 Years in Prison

12/23/22 3 p.m. ET Less than a week after Shah requested a reduced prison sentence of three years, the United States government recommended a judge sentence the Bravo star to 10 years behind bars. In court documents shared on Friday, December 23, the government wrote that Shah “took a series of increasingly extravagant steps to [...]

Moms

Best Big Sis! Chrissy Teigen's Daughter Luna Rubs Mom's Baby Bump

Growing family! After Chrissy Teigen announced that she and John Legend are expecting another child, she showed off her baby bump with a glamorous mirror selfie reveal. In August 2022, the 36-year-old Cravings author joked it took “44 people” to get her ready for the pictures, tagging members of her glam squad, including three hairstylists, [...]

Health Scare

Tamar Braxton Is On the Mend After Being Rushed to the Hospital for the Flu

Tamar Braxton experienced a scary few days after being rushed to the hospital earlier this week following flu-like symptoms. “This isn’t an attention post ... this is an ATTENTION post,” Braxton, 45, wrote via Instagram on Thursday, December 22. The The Braxton Family Values star revealed that after being at her “best friends” doing “Christmas fun [...]

Real Talk

Hollywood Favoritism? Jamie Lee Curtis, More Stars React to ‘Nepo Baby’ Article

Lifestyles of the rich, famous and inherently privileged. Jamie Lee Curtis, Lily Allen and more “nepo babies” clapped back at claims they have it easier in Hollywood following New York Magazine’s bombshell cover story. Stars whose parents or relatives are already in the industry — and the culture that rewards them — came under fire [...]

Holidays With Us

12 Christmas Movies You Forgot About

With the same old films in heavy rotation on television every December — think Home Alone, A Christmas Story and Love Actually — you may be sleeping on other yuletide favorites from the silver screen. 1988’s Scrooged, for example, marked Bill Murray’s first film since Ghostbusters, and it puts a modern-day spin on Charles Dickens’ [...]

Love Lives

Bode Miller and Morgan Beck's Relationship Timeline

A gold medal-worthy love! Bode Miller found his forever teammate in now-wife Morgan Miller (née Beck) after connecting at one of her volleyball games. The Olympic skier first met Morgan in May 2012 — two weeks before he found out his ex-girlfriend Sara McKenna was pregnant with his child. Their son, Samuel, was born in [...]

Shoe Envy

These Tory Burch Sandals Feel Like You're Walking on Clouds — $49 Off

Us Weekly has affiliate partnerships so we may receive compensation for some links to products and services. We all love to look fashionable while wearing a pair of sandals, but sometimes, they're incredibly comfortable when it's time to walk. Well, these Tory Burch sandals are here to change your life. With these shoes, you'll be walking [...]

RIP

Ellen Shares Tearful Video 1 Week After tWitch Dies: 'Everyone Is in Pain'

Grieving a friend, Ellen DeGeneres is still sharing glimpses of her favorite moments with late DJ Stephen "tWitch" Boss nearly two weeks after he died by suicide. "He was magic," the comedian, 64, tweeted on Friday, December 23, alongside a clip from The Ellen DeGeneres Show, which aired its final episode in May. In the [...]

Exclusive

Tom Pelphrey Is 'Enjoying the Ride' After 'Ozark' Success

Tom Pelphrey isn't slowing down — and his next role is anyone's guess. The chameleon actor made his Broadway debut in 2012, won accolades for his role on the daytime soap Guiding Light and recently portrayed a real-life fugitive in this year's true-crime movie American Murderer. And audiences won't soon forget his standout arc on [...]

Microsoft is building an Xbox mobile gaming store to take on Apple and Google

Microsoft is building an Xbox mobile store to directly offer games on mobile devices, challenging Apple and Google. The software giant first hinted at a "next-generation" store it would "build for games" earlier this year but has now quietly revealed details of the plans in filings with the UK's Competition and Markets Authority (CMA).

The CMA is currently investigating the $68.7 billion Activision Blizzard acquisition and has asked Microsoft for context. In its filings, Microsoft says a big motivation for the purchase is to help build out its mobile gaming presence. Its plans for this space apparently include creating an Xbox mobile gaming platform and store. Here's what the company says in the filings:

The transaction will improve Microsoft's ability to create a next generation game store which operates across a range of devices, including mobile as a result of the addition of Activision Blizzard's content. Building on Activision Blizzard's existing communities of gamers, Xbox will seek to scale the Xbox Store to mobile, attracting gamers to a new Xbox Mobile Platform. Shifting consumers away from the Google Play Store and App Store on mobile devices will, however, require a major shift in consumer behavior. Microsoft hopes that by offering well-known and popular content, gamers will be more inclined to try something new.

Call of Duty: Mobile and Candy Crush Saga are two hugely popular mobile games published by Activision and King, respectively, and Microsoft could leverage these titles to help build out a game store to rival Google Play and the App Store. Given Apple's policies blocking third-party app stores on iOS, it's difficult to imagine Microsoft competing on iPhones anytime soon. But that's clearly not stopping it from envisioning an Xbox mobile app store.

Microsoft's acknowledgment of a mobile gaming push comes as the company increasingly positions Xbox Cloud Gaming as an option for mobile gaming on emerging handhelds. Microsoft was quick to support Xbox Cloud Gaming on Valve's Steam Deck, followed by a partnership with Logitech and Razer for their cloud gaming-focused handhelds. That means a push into mobile gaming could happen on multiple fronts — not just on phones and tablets.

Beyond hardware, there's a lot of revenue at stake here, too. Games are some of the most popular downloads on mobile and drive in-app purchases on app stores. Microsoft clearly wants a piece of that pie. Look at how the company describes the opportunity:

The transaction gives Microsoft a meaningful presence in mobile gaming. Mobile gaming revenues from the King division and titles such as Call of Duty: Mobile, as well as ancillary revenue, represented more than half of Activision Blizzard's ... revenues in the first half of 2022. Mobile customers account for around three-quarters of its MAU. Microsoft currently has no meaningful presence in mobile gaming and the Transaction will bring much needed expertise in mobile game development, marketing and advertising. Activision Blizzard will be able to contribute its learnings from developing and publishing mobile games to Xbox gaming studios.

However, the CMA has barely discussed the potential for Microsoft's entrance into mobile gaming as part of its investigation and is instead largely focusing on console gaming, which Microsoft argues is an increasingly smaller part of the overall market. In a graph posted at Microsoft's Activision Blizzard acquisition site, the company depicts the entire gaming market as worth $165 billion in 2020, with consoles making up $33 billion (20 percent), PCs at $40 billion (24 percent), and mobile gaming at $85 billion (51 percent).

Gaming market revenue.

Image: Microsoft

Building a successful rival to the Google Play Store or App Store would be a huge challenge, though, and Microsoft will need to woo third-party developers if it hopes to make inroads.

The company seems to be laying the groundwork here by committing to a set of principles that would allow developers to freely run their own app stores on its Xbox mobile platform and offer their own payment systems to process in-app purchases. That's a benefit Apple certainly doesn't offer. (These commitments don't fully extend to Xbox consoles yet, but Microsoft said earlier this year it's "committed to closing the gap on the remaining principles over time.")

Microsoft says these same principles will also apply to the future Xbox mobile store, which could be enough to lure developers onto the platform. One company that might be particularly interested is Epic Games, which has allied itself with Microsoft in the past few years in the fight against Apple's App Store policies.

Epic Games CEO Tim Sweeney welcomed Microsoft's first hints at an open app store model in 2019 ahead of a giant battle between Epic and Apple a year later that saw Fortnite disappear from iPhones. Epic has been arguing that Apple should allow third-party payment systems in its App Store or even allow rival app stores to function on iPhones and iPads.

Epic eventually called on Microsoft to help argue its case in court, and Microsoft cranked up the pressure on Apple with some significant Windows store changes days ahead of the Epic v. Apple trial last year.

Epic didn't win its legal argument, and Fortnite still isn't back on the iPhone. But Epic did turn to Microsoft to bring Fortnite to Xbox Cloud Gaming earlier this year after court documents revealed Epic originally blocked the game from

Xbox Cloud Gaming as the service was “competitive with our PC offerings.”

This closer partnership between the companies could help persuade Epic to come on board early with Microsoft’s mobile gaming plans. Epic has already embraced Samsung’s Galaxy Store on Android, and having Fortnite and Call of Duty: Mobile on Microsoft’s Xbox mobile game store would be a good start in a difficult task to take on Apple and Google.

Fortnite arrived on Xbox Cloud Gaming earlier this year.

Image: Xbox

However, a big potential stumbling block for Microsoft’s mobile gaming ambitions could be its control of Call of Duty on both mobile and console. Microsoft has seen success with Xbox Game Pass, and it has made it clear it wants to bring Activision games to the service. Regulators are now weighing how this would impact competition.

Xbox Game Pass is also at the heart of the ongoing battles between Microsoft and Sony over Call of Duty. Sony is arguing that Microsoft could take Call of Duty away from PlayStation entirely, while Microsoft says that wouldn’t make business sense. This disagreement has spilled out into a public war of words between Sony’s PlayStation chief and Microsoft’s head of Xbox, but the real conflict is happening behind closed doors.

Microsoft now says keeping Call of Duty on PlayStation is a “commercial imperative for the Xbox business and the economics of the transaction” and that it would put revenue at risk if it pulled Call of Duty from Sony’s consoles. “Microsoft has been clear that it is counting on revenues from the distribution of Activision Blizzard games on Sony PlayStation.”

But even if Call of Duty stays on PlayStation, Sony could still lose out on serious revenue if Microsoft offers the title on Xbox Game Pass. Microsoft previously claimed that Sony is paying for “blocking rights” to keep some games off Xbox Game Pass and now says that’s the case with Call of Duty. “The agreement between Activision Blizzard and Sony includes restrictions on the ability of Activision Blizzard to place Call of Duty titles on Game Pass for a number of years,” says Microsoft in its filings.

The CMA and other regulators now have the unenviable task of untangling these arguments between Sony and Microsoft and figuring out exactly how this deal could harm consumers or competition. Microsoft still hopes to close this deal out by spring 2023, but there’s a good chance we have months of battles ahead — as well as the opportunity to gain rare insights, as with these mobile plans, into the secret ambitions of the gaming industry.

The CFPB may be facing its most significant legal threat yet

A federal appeals court struck a major blow against the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau with a finding that its funding mechanism is unconstitutional.

The decision is likely to be challenged, setting up a major fight for the future of the top U.S. consumer-finance watchdog. That battle could introduce significant uncertainty for the many fintech businesses that fall under the agency's purview.

The decision

A three-judge panel of the New Orleans-based 5th Circuit Court of Appeals found Wednesday that the CFPB's funding structure violated the Constitution's separation of powers doctrine.

As set up under the 2010 Dodd-Frank Act, the CFPB is funded by the Federal Reserve rather than congressional appropriations. That way, in the Obama administration's view, the agency could avoid political influence and be funded similarly to other banking regulators. But Republicans have chafed at what they view as anti-business practices and a lack of oversight.

The structure has been the target of legal challenges before. In this decision, the court ruled in favor of a lawsuit from two trade groups seeking to overturn the CFPB's 2017 payday lending rule. Because the CFPB's funding is unconstitutional, the decision said, the rule itself is invalid.

The background

Other courts have found the CFPB's funding to be constitutional, a point the Wednesday ruling acknowledged. But the panel of Trump-appointed judges said the CFPB's setup is different from other self-funded agencies.

"Congress did not merely cede direct control over the Bureau's budget by insulating it from annual or other time-limited appropriations," the panel wrote. "It also ceded indirect control by providing that the Bureau's self-determined funding be drawn from a source that is itself outside the appropriations process — a double insulation from Congress's purse strings that is 'unprecedented' across the government."

Democratic Sen. Elizabeth Warren, who oversaw the CFPB's creation, responded to the ruling on Twitter, writing that "extreme right-wing judges are throwing into question every rule the CFPB enforces to protect consumers and businesses alike."

Republican Sen. Cynthia Lummis, meanwhile, said the CFPB "needs the same Congressional oversight as every other government agency."

What's next

The CFPB is expected to challenge the ruling, though it has yet to confirm that. It could request what's known as an en banc review from all judges on the 5th Circuit or push the issue to the Supreme Court.

A CFPB spokesperson said "there is nothing novel or unusual about Congress' decision to fund the CFPB outside of annual spending bills" and that the agency "will continue to carry out its vital work enforcing the laws of the nation and protecting American consumers."

To that point, the CFPB issued new guidance to credit-reporting agencies Thursday about omitting what it called "junk data" from credit reports.

The CFPB has faced several challenges to its existence over its 11 years in business. In 2020, the Supreme Court ruled that restrictions on when its leader can be removed were unconstitutional, but rejected a plea to strike down the agency as a whole.

An analysis from the law firm Ballard Spahr noted that the 5th Circuit's decision applies only to federal district courts in Texas, Louisiana, and Mississippi. But "because it is an appellate court ruling, it might be given weight by district courts outside of the Fifth Circuit considering challenges to CFPB enforcement actions."

That means the impact could spread far beyond the agency's payday lending rule.

"The holding will call into question many other regulations that protect consumers with respect to credit cards, bank accounts, mortgage loans, debt collection, credit reports, and identity theft," tweeted Chris Peterson, a former enforcement attorney at the CFPB who is now a law professor at the University of Utah.

The most significant fear from progressive lawmakers and consumer groups is that the CFPB could see its resources chopped if left to the whims of Congress.

"Making the CFPB the only banking regulator subject to Congressional appropriations would put the most pro-consumer federal agency at risk of being starved of the funding it needs to protect consumers," said Mike Litt, the consumer campaign director for the U.S. Public Interest Research Group.

Fintech focus

The new court decision comes as the CFPB, under Biden-appointed director Rohit Chopra, has taken a more aggressive stance toward the financial industry than his Trump administration predecessors. That includes a growing focus on fintech products such as algorithmic lending and "buy now, pay later" arrangements. Chopra has also promised scrutiny over the way large technology companies are expanding into financial services.

But the agency is also taking up initiatives with fintech industry support, including finally setting up open-banking rules to guide data-sharing between financial institutions and tech companies.

What the ruling means for the fintech industry remains to be seen. Should it hold up long term, a lack of resources could hamper the CFPB's pledge to supervise a broader group of fintech businesses.

"Supervisory programs are really resource-intensive," said Patrick Haggerty, a director at advisory firm Klaros Group. "If the agency is relying on appropriations, you might decide to keep the team more lean and mean and targeted for specific issues."

While regulators and companies can occasionally come into conflict, the agencies also serve an important role in providing rules of the road and certainty for business models. If the decision casts further uncertainty around CFPB's existing regulation, that's probably bad for business.

"If you don't know what the rules are, it is hard to innovate," said Melissa Baal Guidorizzi, a partner with the law firm Orrick and former senior CFPB enforcement attorney. "Legal uncertainty can cause considerable friction, particularly for innovators."

NFL News, Expert Analysis, Rumors, Live Updates, and more - Yahoo Sports

Personalize your videos, scores, and news!

We've personalized for TIDSTI paig