141 Area Code – Introduction

The 141 area code is an easily recognizable code, as it is one of the three digits that are always given out first when someone provides their phone number. This area code is used for many different purposes, but it is most commonly associated with phones in Glasgow. The 141 area code is also known as a “non-geographic” code, which means that it is not assigned to any specific place.

The 141 area code was created on January 1, 1947, when the North American Numbering Plan was implemented. The area code originally covered the entire state of Ohio. In 1996, the state of Ohio was split into two area codes, with the 141 area code becoming the area code for the northern half of the state. The southern half of Ohio became part of the new 740 area code.
